Eric Wolf is an anthropologist who subscribes to the world view that considers the Marxian dialectic. Though not touted as his best work. I felt that Envisioning Power gives Wolf more credit than he got for it. He focuses on his quest to explain the locus of culture as stemming from the power struggles of humanity.

The subsequent volume, Pathways to Power, (published in 2001) is also worthwhile, but it is more of a semi-autobiographical set of readings. This is an entirely coherent and unified book. There are some anthropologists who do not like the book because they reject the notion of the "imagined community" (Ben Anderson) and the ways in which Wolf ...
